PSC 5513-220: International Relations Theory

Course Description:

This course is an advanced graduate seminar that surveys the primary theoretical approaches relevant in the study of international relations. The course also explores the ways in which these theories help us understand the daily practice of international politics. Ultimately, the course seeks to provide students with substantive knowledge about how scholars, researchers and analysts use international relations theories to make sense of global affairs, as well as how these theories influence the making and implementation of foreign policies. The first part of the course focuses on the examination of three broad theoretical approaches – realism/neorealism, liberalism/neoliberalism and social constructivism – as well as their application to relevant policy issues of the day. The second part of the course concentrates on the theoretical bases for three specific foreign policy tools and methods, including the democratic peace, diplomatic endeavors and the role of nongovernmental organizations. The final segment of the course focuses on the creation and presentation of international policy projects concerning three important international concerns – illicit trafficking, poverty/development and the global environment.

Academic Integrity and Student Conduct

Academic integrity means honesty and responsibility in scholarship. Academic assignments exist to help students learn; grades exist to show how fully this goal is attained. Therefore all work and all grades should result from the student's own understanding and effort.

Academic misconduct is any act which improperly affects the evaluation of a student's academic performance or achievement. Misconduct occurs when the student either knows or reasonably should know that the act constitutes misconduct. Academic misconduct includes: cheating and using unauthorized materials on examinations and other assignments; improper collaboration, submitting the same assignment for different classes (self-plagiarism); fabrication, forgery, alteration of documents, lying, etc...in order to obtain an academic advantage; assisting others in academic misconduct; attempting to commit academic misconduct; destruction of property, hacking, etc...; intimidation and interference with integrity process; and plagiarism. All students should review the Student's Guide to Academic Integrity at http://integrity.ou.edu/students_guide.html

Students and faculty each have responsibility for maintaining an appropriate learning environment. All students should review policies regarding student conduct at <http://studentconduct.ou.edu/>
