Fort Sill Trivia:
Fort Sill is composed of about 94,000 acres or 145 square miles of mountains, rolling hills, and prairie. It has 287 miles of paved roads and 117 miles of unimproved roads. The military population is about 16,000; the civilian population on post totals 6,200. Within 100 miles of Fort Sill, there are about 10,000 retirees. Family members total about 36,000.

Fort Sill’s mission is to train artillery soldiers and train them well. To do that, they are trained day and night to put “steel on target.”

Fort Sill’s three-pronged approach to training and preparedness makes it one of the best training posts in the Army. It is comprised of the Field Artillery School, the primary training facility for field artillery soldiers and Marines worldwide; the Field Artillery Training Center, home of basic combat, one-station unit training and advanced individual training; and III Corps Artillery, the largest field artillery complex in the world.

The Field Artillery Training Command is the controlling headquarters for the Field Artillery School, the Field Artillery Training Center, and the Fort Sill Non-Commissioned Officer Academy. Each of these organizations has the mission of training artillery soldiers of all ranks to fill positions in U.S. and allied artillery units worldwide.

Each year, the Field Artillery Training Center trains of 17,000 young civilians to be capable, confident soldiers. The Non-Commissioned Officer Academy conducts three courses that develop and refine the professional attributes of artillery noncommissioned officers. More than 1,950 noncommissioned officers are trained annually.

The Field Artillery Half Section is the Army’s only horse-drawn artillery unit and is proof – at least at Fort Sill – that the caissons are still rolling along. The Field Artillery Half Section stands out as one of the Army’s most unique units. It is an authentic replica of horse-drawn artillery used by the military in the 1920s and is officially recognized as one of only four Army special ceremonial units. The unit gets its name because it is “half” of the full section of horse-drawn artillery that thundered across yesterday’s battlefields.

The Half Section is much in demand. It has been to three Inaugural Parades – in 1973 for President Richard Nixon, in 1985 for President Ronald Regan’s parade, and in 1989 for President George Bush.
